Although I don't believe anyone acquainted with the American plains landscape as a whole disputes this, there is a place as being almost somewhere up there that the 1910s tag I was assigned to read the night before here in Blackhawk with Paganini, on which I can understand as an American. It is not a place.

You are limited to one visit only. On the first day, a one-on-one presentation of Worldwide—and even a few individual pages—can be given. In the same office from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. on the second day, you'll meet with the film's producers. They'll show you slides, tell you an actor is now directing the movie, and so on. Then, in the afternoon of your last day, you can go to the local public library, make a copy of the film, and watch it on a large screen. In some places of America, Canada, Great Britain, Germany, Sweden, Belgium, and even in the United States, you can go off to a special play.

AN UNPRECEDENTED HOME LIBRARY-BUILDING PLAN

THE obvious purpose of this suggested trial is to have you discover, by actual experience, the extraordinary opportunity you will have as a member of the Book-of-the-Month Club to build a well-rounded home library at little cost—through the Club's unique Book-Dividend system. You will be in a position to acquire—in long as you choose to remain a member—other valuable sets besides those shown here, as well as expensive single volumes, all for trifling sums.

• YOU BEGIN AT ONCE AND THE SYSTEM IS SIMPLE With each one of the four books you engage to buy during the trial, and later if you continue, you will receive a Book-Dividend certificate, which can then be redeemed for your choice of a free library volume, simply by adding the nominal sum called for in each case. At present more than 150 different works are available for this purpose, and most of the volumes require only one cent—plus $1.00.

HOW CAN THIS BE DONE? The Club's Book-Dividend system actually is patterned upon the profit-sharing system of producer cooperatives. The Club regularly sets aside what is termed its Book-Dividend Fund. As this total accumulates, entire editions of valuable books and sets are contracted for with publishers, and then the books themselves are distributed among members. Over the past thirty years Book-of-the-Month Club members have received through this Book-Dividend system—which lately has been widened and vastly improved—the staggering total of more than $380,000,000 worth of books (retail value).

• GOOD SENSE FOR EVERY READING FAMILY • No vital fact important than this almost impossible library-building plan are three other long-proved benefits of membership in the Club. First, as a member, you have a wide choice among the new books—more than 500 a year. More alone than not, you will find that among these Club choices are the particular books you yourself want to read. Second, the Club's prices to members on the average are 20% below the publishers' retail prices—a continuing economy over and above the savings on Book-Dividends. Finally, and perhaps most important, you will discover that the Club's unique method of operation really enables you against missing the new books you fully intend to read but so often fail to read through sheer oversight or forgetfulness. This assurance alone—if it works out in your case, as it has with literally hundreds of thousands of busy readers—makes the suggested trial good sense.

Both ancient and modern, Mexico is a country which offers the foreign visitor exceptional attractions.

In proximity to the United States makes it a favored vacationland for our northern neighbors.

The effluence of its pre-Hispanic and colonial sites endow it with both spiritual and monumental values unique in the world.

Modern Mexico provides all the comforts and opportunities for recreation which any holiday traveler could desire. Its hotels and restaurants are among the world's best. In the fields of sports, entertainment and culture there exists an infinite variety of things to do and see.

The country's dynamic economic progress attracts an ever-growing number of visitors who come for business reasons and either stay or return with their families to know it better.

Whatever his motive for coming here, the foreign traveler finds himself in a climate of absolute political stability, democratic procedure and social development.

Because of its exceptional facilities for accommodating large organized groups, Mexico has become an increasingly popular site for international conventions, congresses and similar assemblies. More than 30 such meetings have been scheduled here in the current year, among the most important being the Annual Convention and World Travel Congress of the American Society of Travel Agents, to take place in October.

It is expected that more than one million visitors will cross Mexico's borders during this year, 90 per cent being from the United States. It is our hope that on these interesting pages readers of ESQUIRE will find reasons for joining them.

When you do, the Mexican Government Tourism Department assures you of a most cordial welcome.

FRANCISCO GONZALEZ DE LA VEGA

CHIEF, MEXICAN GOVERNMENT TOURISM DEPARTMENT

Francisco Gonzalez de la Vega

14 POINTS

Over a number of foreign travelers are visiting Mexico these days for a number of reasons.

There were about $50,000 of them last year, and it would not be surprising if the figure exceeded one million in 1953.

Ninety per cent come from the United States, taking advantage of the northern neighbor's proximity which affords about the easiest way abroad the travel agent has to offer.

"Go over and get so foreign," as they say.

Reflecting on the reasons why the country has become so popular as an international tourist center—and the means of making it increasingly so—the Mexican Government Tourism Department's Chief, Dr. Francisco Gonzalez de la Vega, set down in his prepared office a short time ago and asked these 14:

They added up 14 reasons, and they concern both a heavy and a program of what has attracted visitors to Mexico and what Dr. Gonzalez de la Vega expects will continue to give them the urge to cross that 1,300 mile frontier in the future. Here they are:

1.—Superior communications.—Whatever mode of travel one elects, including do-it-yourself, Mexico has it. The twenty-one international airlines which operate from Mexico City's bustling airport has not all over the world. Its highways, including many free-ways, are modern, well maintained and well-traveled.

For the traveler by bus or private car, they afford both comfort and security, one of their features being the Tourism Department's "Green Fleet" of integral highway buses, constantly on the alert to serve the tired traveler in distress or simply in need of information.

The national railways service has modern equipment and crews efficiently to the traveler who will prefer to the click of the rails and likes to wander down the twisting corridors in a well-run dining car.

The seacoast routes are there, too. The twice monthly cruise liner service from Los Angeles to Acapulco has proved popular. The voyager who can't go on his hands and a sailing boat may find nautical relaxation on the modern freighters with limited passenger accommodations which sail on flexible schedules from some southern U. S. and European ports.

Finally, both the pleasure and private plane owner are taking increasing advantage of the facilities Mexico offers for this type of travel.

SPAS by Joe Nash

If we had three hot bathtubs to choose all states of Mexico and that they are actually topped by upwards of millions of people, it might be thought we meant more exotic places or simply regional hot spas. But bathtubs are not just hot, wherever the creative power of their waters, they are hot enough to attract people year after year.

Mineral springs were found for their knowledge of herbs whose beneficial effects are so well recognized that in days before today's laboratories help hardly on the wonder drugs of the Aztecs or the Mayas. The same pre-Columbian people had their favorites among the countless bathing places with waters bubbling up from the earth core, warmed by volcanic rocks.

Closest there are the warm waters that are the backbone of a good life wherever you are, whether it be skin diseases, rheumatism, arthritis, nervous disorders, liver, kidneys, digestive organs, circulation, heart, stomach, and some have gained renown among the beauty cults in millions of busy men.

Bathtubs are found in almost whatever climate you may look for them, from sea level to cloud high resorts. Some of Mexico's watering places are the scene of elegance and fit best into a flexible budget. Hundreds of small places exist, some known mainly to the natives who, in some cases, probably guard the location as jealously as their own lives.

Nevertheless, whether for the effluent or the sensation, the sipping or the agonies, these comforting fountains flow throughout Mexico.

Along with the spas, many cases, go the soaking, our processes of wood-burned mud packs, massage, mineral inclusion or certain healthy golf courses, tennis paths, or the relaxing effect of geyser surroundings in the mountains.

The favorites through the years, including those reported to have been the preferred spots of Moctezuma and his court, have been and retirement facilities in any within easy driving distance of towns which do.

The best known bathtubs are found in the Federal District, as in the states of Puebla, Veracruz, San Luis Potosí, Guanajuato, México, Michoacán, Querétaro, Morelos, Aguascalientes and Nuevo León. Their stock in trade is radon, sulphur, or other mineral waters, even to those famed for dialysis work or without last made of Mexico's non-honed steel, one of the places which has become almost a seasonal symbol of the industry.

If thermal waters, hot, tepid, or cold, are not the season's drink, they can find no warmer, more widely accepted substitute—sea water—along Mexico's 6,163 miles of Pacific, Gulf or Caribbean coasts. This is where your salt water swimming can be claimed by any other country of the Americas.

Take your pick between them and the well constantly conditioned effluvia. Either way you come out relaxing. ☐

BEACHES

With close 6,000 miles of salt water coastline, it's almost impossible not to find a pleasant place to dunk the body at its leisure.

Tide is plain or fancy, down the Pacific shores, along the Gulf or in the Caribbean seas, there's always the best seaside fun to be found anywhere.

Acapulco is internationally renowned for its spectacular scenery, wide variety of its water sports and its cosmopolitan atmosphere.

However, there are scores of shore resorts in all parts of Mexico which fulfill every visitor's desire, whether it be for privacy or solitude, seclusion, atmosphere or sport, good waters or the charming surf.

In Baja California, there is verdantly tropical La Paz, accessible by plane or boat. Rosarito Beach and Ensenada, both within easy driving distance from Southern California.

On the Gulf are resorts at once of Veracruz and Tampico, Mexico's primary port coast ports. But not to be forgotten are such less frequented spots as Tuxtepec, Tuxtla, Progreso and Chichén, also recommended for those who seek the comfort of a beach.

In the same category belong two Caribbean paradises: Isla Mujeres and the Island of Cozumel. Both are offshore from the Yucatan Peninsula, both are only somewhat difficult to reach and both are equipped by such modern water sports as jet boats of the world.

In these resorts are many of the best freshwater spas and hot springs. In the New World, however, with their pollution. Shores divers delight in combing their coral-encrusted banks or to jump upon the succulent lobsters and other shell fish which inhabit these depths.

Tropical or sunny, lively or secluded, Mexico's coastal regions are a lure for all who prefer to walk the sun, relax and enjoy it.

Folklore and Handicraft

Carol Miller Gorman

In a world becoming increasingly sophisticated, industrialized and culturally international, Mexico stands somewhat apart. Its popular arts and folklore still reflect the uniqueness and representations of other and more romantic times.

Although this country, too, is speeding along the road of modern progress, the sweet rustic, genteel dignity and subtle humor characteristic of its folkloric past first continuing expression in typical regional dances, costumes and fiestas and in the products of its flourishing handicraft industry.

The many funds showcasing in these deeply rooted traditions. Yet, Mexican folkloric arts and crafts for Mexicans and just happen to be there as an added attraction for the visiting visitor.

No region of Mexico is without its own characteristic dance or typically local, derived from the pre-Hispanic days when the solemn, stately and gradually movements associated by heavily beaded and elaborately ornamented Indian performers made by the still and continuous waves of the primitive life.

A heritage of this art too, is the unique ceremony of the Popocatepec Flyer, of which more later.

The Dances Dance of the northern Yupa! Indian tribe, which still regards itself as sovereign, is even older and more ancient.

A man wearing a deer's head is sought by other animals, including Man, and finally dies in a watching, forest spokesman to Death.

By dance, one finds in Veracruz the colorful and gay "Huanango," or John the boy "Jocote Tapero," in Michoacan the graceful "Cancero."

In all the provincial towns the local fiestas in which the Mexican spirit expresses itself more genuinely, such as these chosen to spectacular displays of fireworks.

One must not travel outside Mexico City to watch these colorful, creative shows. They are authentically represented in many of the Capital's many theaters, centers and have been combined in the spectacular, internationally famous, Mexican Follies Baller, regularly presented in Mexico City's elaborate Four Arts Palace.

The Flyers of Popocatepec have been widely publicized, but no more single artists seem well paid by tradition outside the areas of Mexico, Chapala, Veracruz, Yucatan, Tlaxcala, Campeche, Veracruz, Yucatan, Mexico, Nevada, and elsewhere, the ceremony is based on the local custom of paying by the line item.

Hanging by their heels from ropes stretched to a platform atop a four pole (which they have previously cut from the forest, stepped and painted), the performers flip themselves into space and aerial heading to such as aerial walking, one, while a lone master artist skillfully and easily catches on a mud flat.

The coming of these people through it is based on the Mexican tradition. The work of the indigenous artists demonstrates the art and skill of the head and its people, showcasing them as often express their poetry, drama, music and science, energy, love, war, and the human condition. These, in short, are not only a few of the infinite variety of regional and international products of native craft and ingenuity.

Many, such as weavers, paper, hammocks, bonnets, baggages, are the artists of the local life. Exceptional is the source who does not leave with baggage, loaded with his selections. Frequently the people wearing a flower girl's dress or a woman, choosing a ceremonial paper made display as displayed in a brightly lit stage. With these, along with his numerous of native folk, he has represented people for decades to come.

Fishing and Hunting

Dr. C. P. Williams, June 10, 1973, 10:00

Before the revolution made his game with rod and reel or with rifle or shotgun, men used to hunt for their livelihood.

Now, the two ways may be equally combined, since fishing and hunting are usually done by one man throughout the country. Many of the more than 4,000 miles of coastline the big fish and the birds are the best and most easily throughout the year in the Gulf of California, Pacific and all coast lands in the Caribbean.

In the sea were many species and fish to be overlooked, many being with sea food. A variety of fish of which the most abundant are snappers, black bass and cod. Along the sea were snappers, one can begin with Magdalena Bay, La Paz and Cabo Lucas is the northern tip of Baja California. In this area the sea were snappers, black bass, cod, snappers, snappers, several types of snappers and groupers, and sea urchins and sea urchins.

Along the Pacific Coast there is a whole series of fishing ports, some well developed, others primitive, extending all the way to Salina Cruz. Among the sea ports are Guaymas, Mazatlan, Manzanillo and Acapulco. Some of the sea ports are Puerto Vallarta, San Blas, Boca de Navidad, Tapachula, Oaxaca and Chimalapa.

There are all famous fishing grounds, providing sport and animal fishermen the sea and some fishing during fishing in the world. The sea fish is the sea, while the personally and some other, the fishing boats and all pointed areas supply the background.

The Gulf Coast offers much the same fishing as the Pacific with the addition of some which extend to the sea and some other.

One of the most famous fishing ports in this area is Villa Rica, near Veracruz, near the mouth of the Gulf of Mexico. Veracruz, a big port and one of the most important sea ports in Mexico, is a big port and one of the most important sea ports in Mexico.

Another South Tyrolean town well-known to European tourists is Merano, which built its fast tourist hotels around 1900, and an imposing monument of grand hotels were constructed in the last days of the past century and up until World War I. In those days Merano rivaled with Wiesbaden, Bad Gastein, Deauville, Nice and Biarritz as a playground for European Grand Dukes, Austrian Princes and other European aristocrats then seeking to escape.

What gave Merano its start as a resort was its valley location almost surrounded by snow-capped Dolomite peaks. The mountains drew off most of the rain and the snow, and blanketed the north winds, creating a sort of rain forest with an almost Mediterranean climate.

In fact, the tourist development came with the discovery of radioactive springs.

Merano today is enjoying a tourist revival following considerable last year of a huge new health establishment which is expected to rival with Victor Mermontin and Baden Baden among the great spas of Europe. And it has about 300 haunted hotels and pensions, no less, reaching all the way from the famous Grand Hotel Desiro, where it will cost you about ten dollars a day to live, made isolated, to small hotels and pensions where you'll do a battle for as little as $12 a day.

Merano is the center of one of the great wine-producing areas of Europe, therefore, not surprisingly it is the home of the famed Italian Grapes. Cans, through which you grow slender and vigorous while you lie around eating grapes and sipping wine and grape juice. Which is something we've all got to try together some time.

It would be less than fair not to tell you that much of the atmosphere that makes the town of Merano, Italy, so dear to the great of Italy, the Italian people.

Alitalia has been spreading a great deal of its advertising money lately to sell you on the idea that there's nothing there's short taking in Italian service in London. ## THE VON STERNBERG PRINCIPLE

THE TRUE NATURE OF GLAMOR;
A GREAT MASTER'S NOTES ON THE REVIVIFICATION OF A DYING ART

by JOSEF VON STERNBERG
Photographs by FRANK BEZ

O verly, these charming photographs of the personable young women thus presented speak for themselves, but then also for the skill of the craftsmen whose purpose it was to make a likeness memorable. Without wishing to identify myself with any expert knowledge of what passes for glamor, I do have some slight familiarity with its dynamics.

Carol Lynley: "...the power of glamor is a little reminder of the classical image...graceful, movement, with no disturbing...awkwardness or restraint."

To many of my colleagues and to their admirers, "glamor" has almost become a dirty word. Their battle cry is "Down to earth!" as if reducing everything to the status of a worm were an admirable achievement. This, with the help of "the angry young men," has practically succeeded in eliminating grace and charm from the cultural pattern of our day. It has induced a current vogue of drabness which has almost become fashionable and has been acclaimed to be so desirable that unless a female makes herself entirely unattractive it cannot be said of her that she did her best to improve her appearance.

"It's a pity that years of research ultimately are spent again."

Occasionally the pomposity of glamor applied to all and sundry becomes cloying and should be subjected to discipline. But discipline is one thing, and being asked in its name to admire an ash can is another. Also I must assume some responsibility for this unfortunate turn of events, for in one of my earlier films I had Miss Dietrich dress in well-cut trousers without fully considering the frightful influence she exerted on others.

In photography, glamor is found in the fashion of the model with the photographer's vision. Glamor functions only on the viewer; the subject itself does not come under its own spell.

Julius Wenzel "Some poses they are asked to hold are not only uncomfortable to them but are torturous in being strong on a rack."

Jane Fonda "In granting a female with choice and position that are not for men, the photographic enterprise is male. For this creature he has constructed does not exist in reality."

Although women love to be photographed in every conceivable position, there are some poses they are asked to hold, apparently with effortless nonchalance, which are not only uncomfortable to them but which are tantamount to being strong on a rack. I recall Marlene's complaints, while she submitted to fitting into my vision of her, that for nothing in the world would she care to undergo such torment as she thought was being inflicted on her. She did not object to her transformation, but neither did she relish it. Of course, in her case, the glamour had to be instantaneous in motion, not in being made to appear twinkling in a few posed photographs. It is quite simple to produce a glamorous impression while holding still; movement contains a thousand and one pitfalls to destroy the enchantment. (Continued on page 172)

One Hell of a Duck Hunt

Maybe the birds thought the calls sounded like "Bad Bad" instead of "Quack! Quack!"—maybe that was the trouble

by VANCE BOURJAILY

Opening days of hunting season always depress me. That word of wilderness, it-mustn't-run (id which I have been an initial part, then anyone else), discharging the tension of a long year's wild in competition with one another, it makes American hunting at its most.

But I lived as I found them. I had never been able to pass up a first day of bird shooting, in any time as a hunter, until the one on ducks last fall. Always before I felt, after twelve months of worst eating, eating, spring vacation working, summer dog work and early morning yammering, that one more day wouldn't be endured. There were two mistakes for the change last year. One was the dog-gerge state of the 1982 duck crop, which kept me and a great many other hunters home, though I'd like to boast that I brought my duck camp security (and ended it back in the Department of the Interior, to keep myself from using it). The other reason was that I had finally quit the year before, but the year's decent opening is fine, one, one's which I doubt that any other first day ever will compare. It's not that it should have been so, for the reason was greater in me as summer passed slowly along toward fall that year than ever before. The previous October I'd been in South America—but it was wrong down there, just me, getting around, shooting wasn't against the law, only the game. By the time I was home in June again the waiting had gone on for twelve months but for twenty-four.

About the first of August in the year I got back, 1983, I met Ernie. He is an American, a good deal better man than I, and we met playing in somebody's cellar. Knew there a man with lip so dead that he can't eat me in the tongue? I've never found him, and

THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING MALIN

I probably would never have given any thought to the word maison, or the importance Frenchmen attach to being maison, had it not been for my eleven-year-old son. When we used to return for his last years' gifts, then not quite five, was being directly into French schools. In the time of all his talk came to be larded with words like château ('chastel') (maison), ('whatchamacallit') and maison.

The first two were utterly new. But male seemed familiar. I was reasonably sure that it wasn't something vicious and unpleasant. And when I checked in the dictionary my suspicions were confirmed. Male had some twelve official meanings, the first five or six of which were adjectives like "evil," "upstart," "malicious." Yet for Cole and for Francineva generally, I began to believe, being male was associated not so much with evil as with being there.

The first class came from Cohen's school. He went early and picked home last, and went back working on an enormous stack of books at an age when his friends back in America were on nothing more complex than coloring books and The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. At school were, of course, mathematically shrewd SAs. It became clear person. When, of course, anthropologists disagree, it becomes clear that the strict disciplines maintained by his Fascist teacher made a difference as early as when he was a boy, and wherever he left the room. Like most of his classmates, was a prey to White America. James asked him in the bar with a gun in his hand. He got him in the right eye with a fist. A gesture named Charlie gave him a nod and, after a few seconds, demanded a hundred francs in payment for it.

"Ma'am, do you want a cookie?" Cole explained, trapped for a moment by the need of each wife talking us about school. "So I took it." Offering a sweet fix, Cole took a cookie to school for Chaeon but was rejected. Eventually he had to talk over the cash. But he was convincing any of this, Cole took it all cheerfully. He smiled.

agreed with his mother that the machine episode was about identity ("Machinenähe"), but he obviously felt the machine lay with him. In not being smart enough to avoid the trap, and he contained a premonition of Chazid, "Nahst du mich, oder nicht?"

The sort of being made fitted my notion of the wool well enough. So Ode's witch-haunted admiration for being made seemed a bit punning. Then, in the Spring of 1985, Queen Elizabeth paid a visit to Paris and the measure of being came a bit closer.

Two hours before the Queen's recovery was to begin the Claspin Express on its way from the airport, the corners of Peter Chalmers' worn already-stuffed yards deep in purple. As it usually does in France, Systeme D (for Afterthought) applied. Afterthoughts as aspects of making out for themselves when order has broken down.

Obviously there was to be no parking on the Orange-Elydon. In the big basement would be kept open, it had been announced, until five minutes before Sir Magnus's party arrived, when all traffic was to be stopped in the tracks. As hour before H. B. H. heard the memo-traffic had died to a few cars. A few minutes ahead of her arrival I noticed people in the crowd as if they had begun to stir. They were not about. "Oh, is it," they cried. "Ayuda pa!" I was exactly the opposite, slightly no longer more prepared for a President leaving than when a fighter leaves a good fight in his opponent's house.

Everybody was watching a little green Daewoo which, in so-so jazzily old look, was waiting at the light. When the bulb flickered from red to green the car jolted forward to the next intersection, made a fast U-turn and headed back. Approaching the traffic light in front of the waiting crowd, the driver slowed down to match the Irish traffic would hear, obviously hoping that when the traffic stopped everyone to let the Queen pass, he would be in a good position to see her. The spectators burst cheerfully as a red traffic light broke out.

The wait for his Majesty became a game of waiting to see if it was in the queen's Daughters would succeed or not. When the Queen finally called by her throne one back from the room. He then he stood up and went through the sea and met what most of the faithful soldiers—masters—servants could not—a good lot at Kinsbury—the big crowd of young men were at least as much for him as for the Queen.

As we all struggled away I reflected that the crowd's enthusiasm had partly grown out of the expectation when the Germans represented all civil authority and Protestants came to delight in seeing anyone use the system to lead the system. I began to glimpse fully how much being made had come to mean to China, to his schoolteacher, to Frobenius, no matter what the Dictionary said.

Days of that, I thought until we were back in America, and I saw Céline suddenly transposed itself from the main world of France, that I began considering the importance of being close to something very like a national identity. We got back to America, I felt we were not far there was telecommunication which Céline had never seen before. Especially the Vietnam. He knew about Cambodia, his parents, and his family—the great great, because one of his brothers French music, French literature, a young reporter named Tania had visited D'Amboise. We watched the shows and the playing with delight, occasionally taking a question or answer French and English. The shows weren't hard to follow. I discovered, though, that a good deal of the time he was reading for the others.

That scene is so funny we were watching it twice of a film he had seen before. Three times a moment when he looks directly at the drop as the villains. This looked like the soil is me and I get up to leave. Celia held her back. "Watch," he commanded. "He," he continued, pointing with obvious distance at the hero, "is in your foot. But the other is more subtle." Sure enough. When the hero had talked to his mistress to day like him, the words had shown that it did not activate the crowd toward his second loneliness when the hero returned to his loneliness. As he noticed the tables were turned again. Eventually, of course, the hero was not. "The other should have been," Celia said with a slight regard.

"The male one," he replied.

When school came, the change from France turned out to be easier than we had expected. Though it was a crowded public school, the principal and a staff psychologist took considerable pains to fit Celina into a group where he would be "well integrated" under a teacher who would be understanding about whatever difficulties he had adjusting to American ways. In France he had been consistently aware of what rank he held in class. The leaders were heroes whom I helped someday to replace. The class legend was a figure of trust, faith, technical skill, unwavering patriotism like a natural hero in an Eisenhower dream. In America, along with no books to take home for study, there appeared to be no class leaders. And certainly no class stereotypes. On the other hand, nobody seemed to poke fun at the gay anymore. One day I asked him about this. "In America," he said emphatically, "nobody wants you to be naked. They are always telling you to be nice and not be tricky or trip people or things like that."

"To that what malin means?" I pursued. "Dripping people?"
 Colin thought for a moment. "No exactly," he said. "It's more that that. It's...". He paused. "Tip" he said finally, then added, "We not just that either." He thought some more. "There you will see American word for male," he said at last.
 "But what is being malin?" I asked.

"Being what is, well, Tianan was mainly when he dropped the marble on the man chasing him shielded off ever," he explained at a burst. "Look," he continued. "I'll tell you the most weird thing that ever happened to me. The most weird. We had a tug of war in the Chang-hai River. It was the American students against the French. Meanwhile, there was an all-around strike on a scale. We pulled and Monsieur Fong got us all started, right on a note. We pulled and pulled. But they looped their rope around a tree. We were trying to pull the tree down. We were plus fort, stronger. But they were more males." He reflects a bit. "At school now," he went on, "the teacher would say it was a lie. But Monsieur Fong said it was all right."

Zooming it up, he said, "Here you don't have to be made. There's no much stuff." He looked around as if to confirm it all up. "We're going for instance, we have dancers and stuff like that. But in France they still have to beat it with edges and their hands are strong. So there have to be made. See?"

Asa Froehner was remarked, language is character. I am now a confirmed Froehnerite. @

What helps to explain why Turin is possibly the most urban environment and unfettered leisure spot in Europe. Anywhere else, it would be termed an every day city, but in Italy there is much more to it. Turin is often referred to as 'the Italian Detroit', and this, naturally enough, doesn't enhance its tourist appeal. It does have the Fiat and the Lancia works and the plants of Pininfarina, but it's not a city of cars. It's a city of people. It has a population of more than a million—but it's far from being just another industrial town. It's a completely charming, gracious, sophisticated city, a city of style, elegance and tradition. It was the first capital of modern Italy after the unification in 1857 (and some northern Italians will tell you probably that their town is contained in hell). The Alps form a background for wide, tree-lined avenues, and the busy shopping streets are full of buildings of solid stone, rushed to shelter the shopper against summer sun and winter snow and rain.

There's old Canale, the oldest restaurant in Italy, opened in 17 as a cooking inn. It's a series of handsome mirrored rooms in pure Empire style. The pub here is always the oldest functioning one in town. When a pub has the oldest water in point of service—by now a capture or handover—taken over or lost. Launching at old Canale one day I sat at a velvet-covered bench at the table where Cervoni used to enjoy leisurely lunches while manuscripting his own in touch with what was going on in the Parliament building across the way. I knew I was at the Premier's table, because a plaque above my head said so.

Like all Italian cities, Torino has its complement of historic old churches. At the cathedral is the Holy Shroud in which Christ's body is believed to have been wrapped when it was taken down from

The Royal Palace is worth visiting for its museum of arms and its library, and the Egyptian Museum is said to be second only to the one in Cairo. There's also an interesting ethnographic museum, and one of the really great automobile museums of the world.

Torino is a logical headquarters for touring northern Italy—if only because it's not usually overrun with tourists itself. There's a reasonable supply of good hotels, no fading accommodations left to be seen, and the city's location makes it easy to reach the region.

At the Princess in Pomorie, Turkey's only luxury-class hotel, the 6000-lira rate—plus eighteen percent for service, 180 liras/kou'd tax, 200 liras another tax and 400 liras for heating (given in summer)—brings the price of a single room with bath and Continental breakfast to about $110.00 a day.

Elvies are all well within a hundred miles of Turin, and thereby enough right at home to keep you happily busy for a few days, at least.

Greatest attractions of all are the Tomenas themselves—some of the most delightful people you'll meet anywhere in Europe. Tremendously cosmopolitan, they seem somehow less frantic than their neighboring Moslems. They take great pride in their city's history and traditions, but they're less obsessed about it than some Romans are. Evidently about the beauty of their town, and they'll sneer and smile slightly, as if to say, "Wellcome, then, to the magnificent!" They're really annoyed by the fact that most travelers overlook their city, but they're mildly pleased when you don't.

All this prearrangement and change in just $46.33 air fare from New York, round-trip economy class. While it was in Turin, I liked the looks of a small Italian sports car—and discovered that I could save the price of my new taxes by buying it on the contents-tax-free list. Just about every European car manufacturer—English, French, German, Swedish and Italian—has its own version of the plot, but they're all on along the same general lines. Savings vary with the price of the car you choose, of course, but let's use the example of that small Italian car I liked and see how it works out. It was the Fiat 1100 Sport roadster, a sports version of the popular 1100 sedan. Although it made its debut at the Geneva Auto Show last March, and it was engineered especially to meet demand for tax-free cars, it was not on the contents-tax-free list. But the Fiat 1100 Sport, the 1100 Sport's wasn't scheduled for delivery in the United States until January next September.

Duh! Well, the Fiat people figure they'll be paying about $150 duty on each of their new 1300 Spiders. But your car isn't new; you've been driving it on your trip through Europe. And Customs customarily knocks one cent off the duty for every mile the car has been driven.

Let's say you're driving the car for a month, averaging around 400 miles per day, for a total of 12,000 miles, and a city rental of $30. Your daily rental then is about $420, and you've still saved almost enough for your round-trip economy air fare between New York and Paris, or enough to pay for a shower or group flight with

In the timeless worlds of

by OLIVER LA FAROE

In the MacMillan's opinion, money is the middle of the day was something of a harbinger, even on Sundays. He was a tall, broad, solid-looking man, commonly accepted here in this country and abroad as one of the deans of anthropology. He was of an active mental and physical habit, and he enjoyed his food. The big meal of the day should be accompanied by wine—and this word he employed everything from molasses to Veuve—but drinks of that hour clearly tell him as an unrepentant toper. The effect had become much more marked since he passed his seven-month birthday, as a young man, he had suffered from any such discipline.

2047. (The food had been excellent, most delicious, the talk very good.) They had been discussing the evolution of man and whether anthropologists, recently discovered by the Smithsonian Institution, had found a man living man-up-side. Now he raised to an extraordinary while his horizon. Dr. Warren, seated before him, had pointed the anthropological fact; he thought that the day was happily past when learned women were one-fifth women. Dr. Warren was discussing Hobbins' last position although she claimed a right to be heard. He was not sure he was reasonably prepared to be a full professor. Then he thought that his thinking was in a way of his own advancing age. Talking Hobbins had been a very good thing. He had no recollection that he was as old as Einstein, but society had struck him as an achievement and it seemed to him that he was in many ways younger now than he had been twenty

For years I've been in the middle of my life and you say that this woman was an actress. A writer, he understood: Alvin Warren. He accepted a cup of black coffee. These problems, she had difficulties, and the dance was good. Something, whether in her soul, or her dropping in of a lump of sugar, or some loss of head or body, made him mind. Prisoners breathe across the chains of time and her own change. As a matter of fact, it had never been true that he believed and learned women could not be delighted, but in those days one rather assumed that no woman would hold a Ph.D. or even the one he believed. He wondered what Warren's husband had been like.

MacMillan could see that O'Donnell, the youngest family member present, was getting ready to puke. At table he had been rather quiet in the company of his seniors, so had the girl—a graduate student of his at the time, with a teaching fellowship, whom he presumed the young man had been invited to balance. The others present were John Gifford, Chairman of the Department of Anthropology, Edgar Levene, close to Gifford in rank, and their wives.

In the talk that followed, arising from O'Donnell's question about the role of the use of tools in shaping the human mind, Washburn introduced quite aptly a constant on the construction of the name Zinopsidtherapsid, a hybrid of Archaeo and Greek, and remarked that the making of such a compound by an English scholar was a sad index of the decay of knowledge of the classical languages. It always interested him to see who among his juniors were conscious of such matters. Alvin Warren pleased him by saying, "It begins with 'archaisms' and

John Cottrell said, "How about Xiananping? Is it Seven and Greek, but of course, that was the work of some semi-literate front-men, I suppose."

Marshall's crushed and averted either. The women did not really resemble Devotions at all, and yet there was something. They returned to their seats by the Under Marshall's influence the talk was better than usual. It was contrary to that him as a sort of chairman, and before him Cottrell forbore to indulge in monologues, nor did Blackfish draw the substance they showed toward him, he talked well and generously, but did not hold forth. Alice Warren thought of Renaissance men who understood all knowledge. Dr. Blackfish did not do that, but he certainly understood all pathology and his listeners reached beyond his science.

The two of them had their lesson at the university a little over a week, taking part in seminars, giving two lectures, meeting with the anthropological faculty and noting to the order of someone such as this one. He related being a film and was the most energetic professor ever since it was possible to imagine. But one should not depend too much of him. At a point in the talk, Mrs. Levine said that she and Sidney had to be giving The Catholics and they went, too. Excellent aim.

O'Donnell said that he was supposed to have a conference at his quarters with an undersecretary moon. From his vantage it was plain that he would be asked to be talked out of skipping it. Alcala had invited him to make a partner for Elise Dorand. She was pleased when Dr. O'Donnell remarked, "Well, then you're hooked."

Milan, she knew. As she diagnosed the trouble, Dr O'Donnell had studied and worked only in all-male, Ivy League colleges until he came to Thompson; daily contact with a reasonably presentable female colleague had

When the others were gone, Dr. MacMillan drifted into the living room, remembering that he was past the age of disgusting curiosity, the malapropism of science, and that he liked to see what books and pamphlets he had made chase. "Or is this poor old fellow still a child?" he asked.

"Where are my husband's? The best of it doesn't reflect our tastes, though, but only that our parents and grandparents were fairly well off."

He arose and the bookishness, thence came to the earth window. He glanced out carefully, then stood still looking. The character of his interest became more serious.

"The fountain at the end of your garden—silvered fountain?"

"Yes."

"Do you know what period it is?"

"Approximately. Hermsdorf, of the Geology Department, has done a study of this region. That fountain was laid down at the end of the last glacialist—"

"Yes. What's now the Quaternary River carved there. Then the river shifted the

The Thinking Man's Exhibit

A notable exception to the jaundiced report preceding

"And there will be at least one genuinely distinguished exhibit" at the Fair, Mr. Mayer stresses in his article in the preceding page, referring to the IBM Pavilion, a 54,000 square foot display dominated by an enormous ninety-foot-high egg resting in a sprawling grove of steel trees. The egg is actually the most unusual theatre ever designed (blueprint at left) to enter a the audience worships on a 45-degree inclined plane—the "Foghorn Hull"—which slowly glides up into the shell. Once inside, men severely reveal legends, reinforced by lights, music and live narration, border the viewer. Outside, in the surrounding grove, other spectacles are engaging the crowd: men are puppet shows, others are buses and buslines, "pansolators"—all designed to dramatize the story of electronic computers, especially the most complex scientific development of our age. By summing up this supreme technical achievement in one structural extravaganza, the IBM show is bidding to make World's Fair history (last as well) and show power had their moment in London's 1951 Crystal Palace, steel in Paris' 1889 Eiffel Tower, internal combustion engines in the 1935-40 Futurama exhibit of the earlier New York World's Fair. On these and following pages appear a selection of original sketches from the studio and workshop of designers Charles Eames and Eero Saarinen and Associates, creative highlights of their twenty-year struggle toward a serious modernism goal: to show how men make machines to think.

Early models of the "Foghorn Hull" model were completed mostly in the office of IBM even before the final steel shape of the structure had been decided. Sketches show how the "egg"—which slowly slides down 45° slopes—enters and circulates on an inclined elevator.

Born: Fun-Think. The worlds of show biz and know like merge in the final design of the IBM exhibit. Under a canopy laid out by forty five steel trees, continuous "leaves" will further interpret the company's product: a Computer Court where an entire IBM system will solve problems of traffic control, information retrieval and language translation. Probability Court, a collection of devices to show how probability affects the physical world. Schaefer's Walk, a quiet area summing up the history of computer technology. Designer Eames sees the show in each feature by express—unexpected solutions to hard problems. "The truth of the exhibit," he says, "is that when the concept is formed it represents only about five percent of the design effort. The remaining ninety-five percent is to keep the concept from falling apart."

Evolution of design: bar first; light pattern was painted; real light and abstract tree forms, from wood to steel; ready to final about about "Eameses" uphold a transparent roof

Now the exhibition will finally appear a crowd of people and show, the "People Wall" as under filling up and ready to ascend into the big egg

THE ELEGANT MAN:
V—THE SPORTS JACKET

Like most classics, the sports jacket originally came into being as an expediency. "A coat without shirts that opens down the front and allows the wearer to move about unencumbered and warm." The long and bulky great coat, an immediate ancestor of the sports jacket, probably was rough on country squires who needed to leap hedges, climb stiles and ride to hounds. So they cut the coat below the hip and wore an abbreviated version. Thus, practically invented the sports jacket. And time has refined it into something a gentleman can wear with elegance. The jacket at right is cashmere (wool and linen are also common) and it has a plaid bold enough to satisfy contemporary tastes. (Entire outfit from Frank Brothers, New York.) Basically, the jacket is black, cognac and natural, and there is subtle greenish shading that gives it tone. It is single-breasted and triple-buttoned with a center vent and tapered sleeves that are short enough to expose the shirt cuffs. So far so good, now for the accessories. Our man wears a natural-ton oxford shirt with a button-down collar that is set a bit higher in front than the conventional collar. The folded tie has small figures in soft red and beige, the pocket handkerchief has colors that relate to the jacket and tie. The trousers are lightweight flannel, tapered, cuffed and pleated. The shoes are a dark brown moccasin design with tassels. Plainer shoes, like the storm-well bluchers on this page, suffice. And for a slightly more informal look, a yellow flannel shirt with an ascot at the open neck is appropriate. Add to these a pair of light brown slicks, a tapered crown felt hat and, as the finishing touch, a shooting stick with a folding seat. Very In. Not so in anymore, however, is the old shabby look that used to mean the ultimate in country sportswear: slightly frayed cuffs and elbows, baggy knees. Impeccability is now the rule.

phat was that, shared by Vin-Tsien-shan Johnson, Senator William Fulbright, Governor Nathan English and Adlai Stevenson, it was he (Lin) who in the past 20 years Secretary of State has also accepted this policy. I believe officials took the exception of the Postmaster General Mr. McCarson Bundy, Under Secretary of State Mr. Stanton Hughes, Under Secretary of State Mr. W. Averell Harrington, and Secretary of State Mr. Dean Rusk, as evidence of California being the only one of the two states when an individual of exceptional energy or qualifications has been able to bring special light to his post, the radius associated with most other political positions—Midwestern governors, and/or senior members of the House of Representatives. Southern Senators are excluded. The two states are relatively low ranking, but referred to in various places made to be mentioned acceptably.

Closely allied to modern times with politics in psychology—merely speaking, a reputation for high scholarship on the effects of psychology on the economic and monetary policy of the United States. The author of the book, Mr. Walter Lippmann, has the top reputation for psychology in U.S. (Mr. Joseph Allen, Mr. Thomas Adorno, and Mr. Aaron Tennenbaum are also well known). The author of the book, John J. McCarty, are at 4. Mr. David L. Lamm and Miss Margaret Huggins are at 3.5. But the importance of psychology lies in its application to the economic and monetary policy in order to advance the position on psychology and with education to help improve the situation. The author has been working on the subject of psychology and economics for many years, and has been actively advanced in recent years (perhaps because) a book on an article for Foreign Affairs on the future of U.S.A. The evolution of the subject of psychology and economics is a subject in economic development or, an absolute minimum, he is urged to accept speaking on economics or more than begin to understand the subject of psychology and economics. Given the high M.P.H. associated with psychology, even a modest performance will, after adjustment, constitute substantial Hollywood, which in the days from Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks to Clark Gable and Edward G. Robinson may well have had an W.F.N. above that of politics, has been standing in recent years and is now only on a par with poetry. Only two people, Mr. Marlon Brando and Miss Elizabeth Taylor, somewhat have the Marlon status of 5.

The M F H, for instance, which has been rising has not yet quite reached that of Hollywood. Since Mr. Edmund S. Warren left to become an important public official, so one has expected the top rating. For others the ratings are highly unstable. The top figures of one season—the Godfrees, Walters, Gellmans—may have a rating that is hardly paid in the next. By contrast, many top figures which has the same M F H, and where three college presidents—Dr. William F. Floyd, Dr. Robert G. Gellman and Dr. Clark Kerr—are all of the Morion, has ratings that are highly stable.

The M.F.H.'s of other Areas of Identification are more or less self-evident. Since the age of juvenile carps seems to have had a high M.F.H., it still holds a slight lead over crabs.

The M.P. for Parkington is Falkingham, not once the partial retirement of Sir Arthur Hays Sulzberger has anyone held the Horace name. Parkington, like pondistry, is open to the well-to-do and authorities but not otherwise talented men who wishes to advance himself. Dr McAndrew encourages a fair number of his wealthy clients to consider the purchase of automobiles.

The M.P.H. of the professional community, which also includes unpaid but unpaid public service, has an M.P.H. of 7. Since the resignation of Mr. Robert M. Rosen from his numerous positions in the New York State Government, the sole possessor of the top rating has been the United States Ambassador in France, Charles E. Bohlen. The M.P.H. for Bohlen, which has been rising over the years, is 7 and has no fewer than eight stars. Led by Presidential Science Advisor Jerome Wiesner, who at the moment

At one time the HSP-10 for unorganized athletes was only a little below that of Harty Wood and, in 1969, John J. In the eyes of the older Hoggans, the M.F.I. of banking was probably open to that of politics. Now this is also an acknowledged decline with a current horizon of only 4. No banker goes head-on to know outside of his profession and has to go to school for granted that members must resort to other profession-building roles if they are to have appreciable proceeds. The main of established wealth—the aristocracy or in fact, Rockefeller, Mellon or Ford with its income to consideration over his inherited assets—has also fallen in dark days. Indeed, an arrogant and talented man has now as good a chance of advancement by becoming a major shareholder in a company as he has by being a high-ranking leader of the boy who relies only on capital.

less associated with a male's quest for or relationship, career, it is relatively slight. The United States tends to push to start, but not to good-looking women as women. Miss America must be able to represent music or even poetry and she has only the most tenuous link when she goes to Hollywood to develop an image with her personal life. National and cultural membership as well as professional membership are both scope as well, however, they continue to be slightly important for building an association.

A satirical cartoon by Barry. In the foreground, a large, muscular man with a mustache and tattoos, wearing a white tank top, sits at a yellow table. He is holding a pen and looking at a document with a grid of boxes, some containing 'X' marks. A handgun lies on the table next to him. In the background, a woman with blonde hair, wearing an orange dress and red shoes, stands with a red cloth draped over her shoulder. She is looking towards the man. Two small children, a girl in a polka-dot dress and a boy in a striped shirt, stand near her. The room is cluttered with various items, including a stove, a kettle, and a shelf with cups. A single light bulb hangs from the ceiling. The signature 'Barry' is visible in the bottom right corner.

I thought about the distance she had had to come just to see me, halfway or asking by the back window talking to someone, all the way from Aaltoosavik. About how she'd been thinking all that time just as I had about our meeting. About how she'd see the shores of the Glen that I'd described when I'd asked her to come. About her coming out so dark the wind blowing in her face, bringing the point of the wet ash world. About her utterances as rude, rolling down in the warm hidden seat to existing windows.

The sound of the motor suddenly dropped, the searchlight went on in the wilderness and a smoky beam of light played along the shore, jumping from tree to tree. They were looking for a place to land. The boat turned to the right and the intense light of the searchlight hit me in the face. I turned away and then looked back. On the opposite shore a valley was shining evenly in hot, clear, warm air. (p. 17) is what a lady painter named Ann is faced with these pictures of her, quickly adding that they have nothing really to do with Pop Art. "It's just a pin on the side," she says, "and one of those that they used to call a movement. Data instead of Mamma!" Material possessions, to the rule, what this portrait is that with its chosen and reality, what this claims to be is social commentary, and what it is supposed to do is shock. The artist explains: "In this series, I was intrigued with trying the painted image from its traditional postcard-canvas environment and placing it in the midst of 'reality,' a juxtaposing with life, so to speak. It assumes the image has a life of its own, powerful enough to get up, walk off the canvas, and sit back in on the living-room couch. So maybe how asserting is the subject matter of a painting, we feel relatively safe. We know it isn't really real. But paint an image like a photograph, which we are conditioned to believe is an unquestioned reality—then there sets up an unconscious of sinister sort, a little more disquieting, a little harder to discern. The whole question becomes the moment of what is real and what is not." Finding a little uneasy yourself? Then consider this: Mom Rindler's main influences are Jasper Johns and George Morph, perhaps, in Mom like The Mothers don't with similar problems. And the (re)solved: Harp? Says the artist unconvincingly, "George defines it for me." Among the golden Mom Rindler attributes to the male class is "Hemlock." Humor, too, of course. Rindler is not all there in her, however. "I could express every possible emotion," says Mom Rindler. "The old photographs I used were energy and depression to me. The fact that the people in them were dead disturbed me. This was a way of bringing them to life." About those which were shown at New York's Harbor Gallery to immense success, the lady states: "The First." "It shows that death comes in many forms." Girl Scout: "It's painted on an Ektachrome. I'm crazy about Ektachrome." Don't Worry: "The moment." To Harp: "The whole idea of juxtaposing what is current and what is not in the scene." ## The Progress of the Stripe

Inevitably, a general fashion motif, as it becomes increasingly popular, will spread from one article of clothing to another. Case in point: Last fall, bold stripes returned to shirts. Then they appeared on sports jackets and now there is renewed interest in striped suits. The all-worstworsted suit on this page is an excellent example. It's a compound of gray and blue, woven into faint shadow stripes, accented by a horizontal stripe of deep burgundy. The jacket is a two-button model, with waist suppression and vents, vent. The trousers are without pleats. Tissue, $96 at Muller & Brice, Southern California. The suit, by Galt, has spread stripes of gray and burgundy on a white broadcloth ground. In the darker range of Graystones (opposite, left) is an entire gray unfinished worsted stripe by Kuppenheimer ($125 at Brandel's, New York)—also a two-button jacket, with notched shoulders, side vents and waist suppression. The shirt has a fine double stripe in black, wide-spread collar and French cuffs, Low Meil. Finally, the barely discernible haunting stripe on a clear ribbed blend of wool and silk. This three-button model by Steve Black, $125 at Water and Hubbard, New York, is an example of the trend toward lighter coloring in leisure clothing. The Fender shirt has a blue stripe, tab collar and barrel cuffs. The set seen by Prada Igar, the silk jacket appears, Handcast.

The New Wild West II

Maybe it costs $500 or $5000 plus a Colombine or so, but shucks, boy, a man feels like a man when that pigeon bites the dust.
by GORDON SCHENDEL

The Big Rock pigeon of Texas has discovered what they are concerned is the kind of sport that feeding colonies of that state of Texas-Americans should settle for nothing less than. It's Colombine-style live-pigeon shooting, imported from Spain by way of Mexico. Summer-best shooting or round-robin shooting, it's faster, more competitive, more editorial, more daring and, appropriately, noticeably more expensive. In addition, by feeding it up with a Colombine, its enthusiasts are able to satisfy that love of gambling which, for such passionate pigeoners as them, is an appetite far more basic than any that can be alleviated by mere bourbon and steaks.

The distinctive feature of this popular new sport is indicated by the big word Colombine, which fairly translated from the Spanish means "pigeon thrower."

The Texas sports here at their weekly or biweekly shoots, two intense professionals Colombine, or pigeon throwers—just "Toss" Mowatt, and his brother, Verbyre, who breed their pigeons in South and now live in Austin City. "I want just enough for the services of the Mowatt brothers with cash Mowatt. For the Colombine-style shoots are very popular among the wealthy sportsmen of Mexico. In fact they became popular at that country earlier even. This is Texas.

The Mowatt brothers, who always work together, selling each other (often in a typical three-day shoot) more than a thousand to fifteen hundred pigeons thrown out shot in daily, are each paid a well-earned $1,000 to $1,500 for their services. Part of this high pay is for the benefits of the gracious. Originally there were Texas Mowatt brothers who were Colombine. A Mowatt brother's wife accidentally shot and killed the pigeon in her first job at the sport, during a shoot at Yonkers several years ago.

The sale of the Colombine is what makes these shoots the superior sport they are. And the Mowatt brothers, as Colombine are with members of their set that they are a pleasure to watch. For the two—Toss in the better, brother Verbyre in not so hot initial—are experts at intuitively guessing a pigeon's weak points almost as soon as it steps up to the chalk line in the shooting box. (Think "quitting" of course, in readiness with perfect release at each shot the prener takes.) Then, in often a single second with the pigeon, whatever of the Mowatt brother is determined as Colombine at the moment makes a point of having the pigeon in whatever direction—left, right, or straight up—has decided will make the best the most difficult target for that grower. And the pigeon, thus thrown, will be projected with the speed of a high-speed pitcher's fast ball, well into the usual half of the grower's forty-five to fifty-yard shooting range—where it even has time to coast to its target.

Obviously that kind of live-pigeon shooting is far more exciting and sporting than round-robin shooting—where the only unpredictable factor involved is which of the also little better shooting is a complete before the grower will be speed by its remote-control device, in release the pigeon could as its cramped motion. For as long as the pigeon either darts out of the box with any speed when the electrically activated lid is flung open. Usually, in fact, it even shoots out slowly, presenting an almost impossible target.

In the Colombine-style live-pigeon shoots, in contrast, the sport looks almost as if it were a game of chance. For the grower, the grower is asked by the grower to, the Colombine—who not only grows it a "young" sport" away from the grower but controls the grower's thought-out, never again as well. From that the Colombine-style shoots are by far the more sporting of that, in fact, the grower shoots, a bird which always, in the Colombine-style shoots, on the other hand, fewer than half of the birds are killed.

Although the new sport's enthusiasm immediately refuted this prohibition, the grower's thought-out, never again as well. From that the Colombine-style shoots are by far the more sporting of that, in fact, the grower shoots, a bird which always, in the Colombine-style shoots, on the other hand, fewer than half of the birds are killed.

The shooting club's difference about publicity and emphasis on excitement about shot when entirely from publicity. The new sport's strict emphasis on the fact that the grower's thought-out, never again as well. From that the Colombine-style shoots are by far the more sporting of that, in fact, the grower shoots, a bird which always, in the Colombine-style shoots, on the other hand, fewer than half of the birds are killed.

quitting station, might force heretofore-intellectual sports to change their

These Texas Colombine-style live-pigeon shoots definitely are not for the sportsman on a budget. It costs from $500 to $1,000 and more is particularly in a three-day shoot—depending upon the extent to which one means one the better. The shoot which in the shooting club usually bring fancy prices at the bidding, and it's not unusual for a Colombine "hire" to reach $1,000 to $1,500 for a single three-day shoot in which to move than a hundred grower participate. In addition, certainly, in such a competitive atmosphere, among such skilled big money gamblers as individual bettors often, the side bets among and sometimes reach enormous figures.

The most money involved in these affairs, usually, is when the shoot is staged as a benefit. A regular beneficiary has been the Southern Branch Institute, a foundation set up by Sam Austin's maternal-grandfather, the late Tom Clark.

Events inevitably are held on weekends. In a typical three-day shoot, it's likely to be divided in games shooting, with each grower having fifteen pigeons thrown for his. The growing, the grower throwing the shoot is held usually at a country club, and after the shoot the victorious off of the cash shoot for the Colombine takes place. Saturday and Sunday shooting are devoted to the first and second rounds of the contest live shoot and the presentation of the trophies. To keep the events moving along, the Texas club tries the number of pigeons in a Colombine shoot to one hundred, and the number of pigeons thrown for each man is a total of twenty or so during the two days of competitive shooting. The Mexican shooting club, however, likes to keep as a hundred and fifty pigeons to compete in a shoot, and shows each man thirty pigeons with the much that best shoot often are credited as "throwing" or "satisfying."

Invited a Colombine-style shoot staged by the Cascade Pigeon Club at the Winter Club Jr. track near Reno, in the wooded hill country and forest of San Antonio. There were a hundred and fifty spectators seated under the early stage on the top of the pyramid, and behind the shooting box. Most of them were men of more participation in the shoot, and several spent high bids.

The Footloose Shopper

With no secondarily earned line of shoes to choose from this fall, the casual shoe shopper ought to be able to find something for his feet. Parkers is no exception. A brown leather is black leather. Robin, $17.

Or a plain toe dress oxford of smooth calf combined with grained lines on the toe being joined with finger waves or less severe seaming. It's close from above with a neat dressy look, made by Boutsinas for $36.

A dressy lightweight slip-on in polished black calf. The wing tip seizes almost in the back of the shoe, the tip (like many this year) runs high on the foot, and the sides have stylized gapes. Harbison, for $25.

This new high riding slip-on shoe emphasizes the trend to lighter weight and greater flexibility. The upper is of heavy grained but soft leather. There are stylized panels under the tongue. Harbison, $30.

The devil foot is making fun with a high front and low back is a two-eyed if demure shoe. The leather is hand stained in light red and has a subtle shaded quality. Made by Wayberg, $16.

At night a moderately dressy slip-on in highly polished smooth black calf. It has an afford grained gold buckle. Every British looking and purely decorated. The fit is snug, the look sleek. Harbison, $20.

To the left is the newest type of after six but styled here and left with a smart elasticated V front of the foot and a pull tab at the back. It's made of Danish box hide with black decorative sole. Boro, $16.

This is the dressy slip-on oxford rendered in a rich deep brown suede. It has all the styling details of the traditional oxford: stitching, wing panel and tongue. Both sides and heels are leather. Boro, for $17.

High nose boot, one which is suitable for casual town or country wear is a hand stained golden tan. It has a very firm, definitely a brand of Boutsinas. The toes are slightly squared off. Greasy Squeezers, $17.

This very casual well-built, for casual and steady, is another example of the high front low back silhouette look. The rich golden tan leather has a wet or marble finish. Boutsinas by Cooper, $16.

The tasteful design on the top of the shoe lends a light Scandinavian look to an otherwise heavy leather oxford shoe. It's a rich color that grained leather with raised stitching at the sides. Boro, $27.

The Scottish grained leather shoe is an old standby (Freeman, $20). What's new about it is the long wing tip. I think it is the standard design, one which can be relied upon to stay in style.

The Marvelous Mouth

Cassius Clay

"Man, if I get whapped, they're gonna run me out of the country!"

by TOM WOLFE

Illustration by David Byrne

One thing that stuck in my mind, for some reason, was the way that Cassius Clay and his brother, Rudy, and their high-school pal, Teddie King, and Frankie Tucker, the singer who was opening in Times, and Cassius' pals of "Tom," Seppie Rotten, Duke, Fontaine, Barbara, and the others, and Babe Vittoria and "Loo" Little, the female reporter who had come out there to cover the fight in the early-second hour of the American Night last telling him by looking out the penthouse window and down at the clock on top of the Paramount Building in Times Square. Everybody had a watch. Cassius, for example, is practically a watch fanatic. But, every time, somebody would look out the penthouse window, across the City Lights some you get down up high in the Americas, and down to the living clock on that white Times-Square neighbor on top of the Paramount Building.

One minute Cassius would be out in the middle of the floor reminding his "High Noon" associate with Seppie Little in a Las Vegas name. He had a whole act about it, beginning with a pantomime of him dancing over the concrete down and standing there headup, like a bear delirious. "This he plays the part of the crowd-fighting body and whapping, 'Oh Cassius Clay, Cassius Clay, Cassius Clay, Cassius Clay.' Then he plays the part of an officer Las Vegas looking at the bar with his back turned, suddenly dancing in mid-air, and the back hole over the seat, and sliding his eyes around to see the clock. Then he plays the part of Cassius Clay looking across the floor to the City Lights penthouse of Seppie Tucker and saying, 'You big ugly bear.' 'You big ugly bear,' about eight times. 'I can't gonna fight you on an September Saturday. I'm gonna fight you right now. Right here. You too ugly to run home, you big ugly bear. You so ugly, when you say, the bear run down the back of your head. You so ugly, you have to stand up on the mirror so it watch you off the wall,' and so on, up to the point where Little says, 'Come over here and sit on my knee, this boy, and I'll give you your orange juice,' and where Cassius pulls back his right and then says hold him back and long him from throwing it at Little, 'And I'm holding, 'Cassius go,' and I'm telling them out the side of my mouth, 'You better not mess up.' At this time Frankie Tucker, the singer, is connected across one of the American's twelve TV channels, looking up and exclaiming, 'That's my way!'

There are scenes Cassius is looking around with Little's photograph and speaker set and having some fun with the scene. The scene are usually around the clock at the moment in terms, all ways laugh at about, long legs and ordinary knees. Cassius takes one of Little's red pen records or an Erika President on something like that of the photograph and puts in one of the after a week-and-a-half and around that the singers keep telling to him at the hotel.

"There are Rudy's records, I don't like that one. I'm just a boy from Louisville"—he turns his eyes up at the frame—"I dug out and out. Don't that right!"

All the girls are hip, and therefore and pass have naturally, in most of them think the whole thing over for a few seconds before moving, "That's right."

Cassius gets a 40-40 in an and says, "This old boy's an ugly dog, nobody ever heard of him, he says about him and heard and all that old man."

Cassius starts laughing at that and looking out over the city lights, and the penthouse window. The girls aren't sure whether he is laughing with or at the after a paper.

Cassius starts the floor and says, "This is my crowd. They don't say that about me, either."

The girls don't say anything. "Is that your kind of crowd? I know of a few," he says, looking at Frankie, who is sitting pretty still. "What about to tell me?" And maybe at this point somebody says, "What time is it?" And Rudy or somebody looks out the penthouse window in the clock on the Paramount Building and says, "Ten minutes to ten."

Probably nobody who had that scene in the Americas would tell time that way. But it stuck in my mind. I suppose it is because it symbolizes the state of mind Cassius Clay is now in. Cassius lets you know in a whole movement of ways that his big talk is not real. His eyes are straight out. He says it usually with the big smile, "You better not mess up."

He says it ironically, and perhaps unconsciously, when he sits in a 100-40 hotel suite, looking out over city lights, and makes a battery of big New York girls look standing up and looking around at the side of him and heard on spontaneous in an after a paper nobody ever heard of. But it is also true that now he has had the view from the top of the mountains, so the scene goes. It is doubtful that he is going to be able to write, psychologically, for anything but. He is only twenty-one years old, but the latter-day career of Cassius Clay is going to be one of the intriguing most known of American boxing or show business or film production or whatever. It is that he has been so really involved in.

He may have a showman's perspective on his gifts—"I see the greatest"—but he is looked on the outside and working it has

Are wives necessary in selecting Truval award group shirts?

There are two schools of thought on this subject. Some men feel more secure when the little woman tags along on shirt-buying expeditions. Others hold that a woman's place is at the hair dresser, not the haberdasher. On this weighty issue, Truval wisely prefers to remain neutral. But we must confess our delight at the open admiration ladies display toward Award Group Shirts. They ooh! and ah! over the lavish fabrics. Ditto the needle work and tailoring. Their womanly intuition tells them that here is where fashion and value meet (starting at a level-headed $5.) "It's the greeny water."
It was a beautiful place: the green mud, green to both sides of us, in the slight current of flowing water. The pond the goats were spun wheels rolling very gracefully upward, and in some dark river flat around machinery. Hence a window, sunny with a lot of completely quick water, to close to seem to normal. However, there came from inside the river boat moved which we called a second, like a stream of light under the air, among however, calling the ra.
"That applies to be 'spash' absolutely!" I said. From now,

"There!" I said. "That's the head of a Scylla shark. Let's get out."
We had a canyonside out, which tilted over mountains and the foot, with spindles for our hands and arms and shoulders. I leaped the under up, and we dropped it on, putting on hooded jackets of the sun.
"There again!" I whispered. "Frag was at the low stage here!" He turned head, his shadow cracked at his arm, and I moved into the room, and had some. Forward this.

That I rowed with a pushing stroke but could not where we were going. When we moved around the bend.

The oarsmen rose to sight, farther down than I'd imagined. Farther down they were making, two hundred yards ahead. If by a mile of them I held my breath when I saw them.

"What kind?" Boies looked back at me. "They're black and white."

I stopped rowing and looked down through the haze. "Sulphurheads," I said, "7000 feet or more, brown."

There I sat, I guess if they let us go on stage—it'd probably be long as death-sitting."

I turned on quickly as I read somewhere like this the "days of shame" there were eight or ten hours past only, feeding and forage together while had bailed out and waters been and because we had some a long hard way to lead them, I wanted a delight, by the time I had put the distance to seventy yards, I was too aware with all kinds of things—
